

History of Desire
Wednesday 29 March, 2023

Completion is balance of inner and outer.

The Self in Consciousness is imposed upon Self in Unconsciousness.

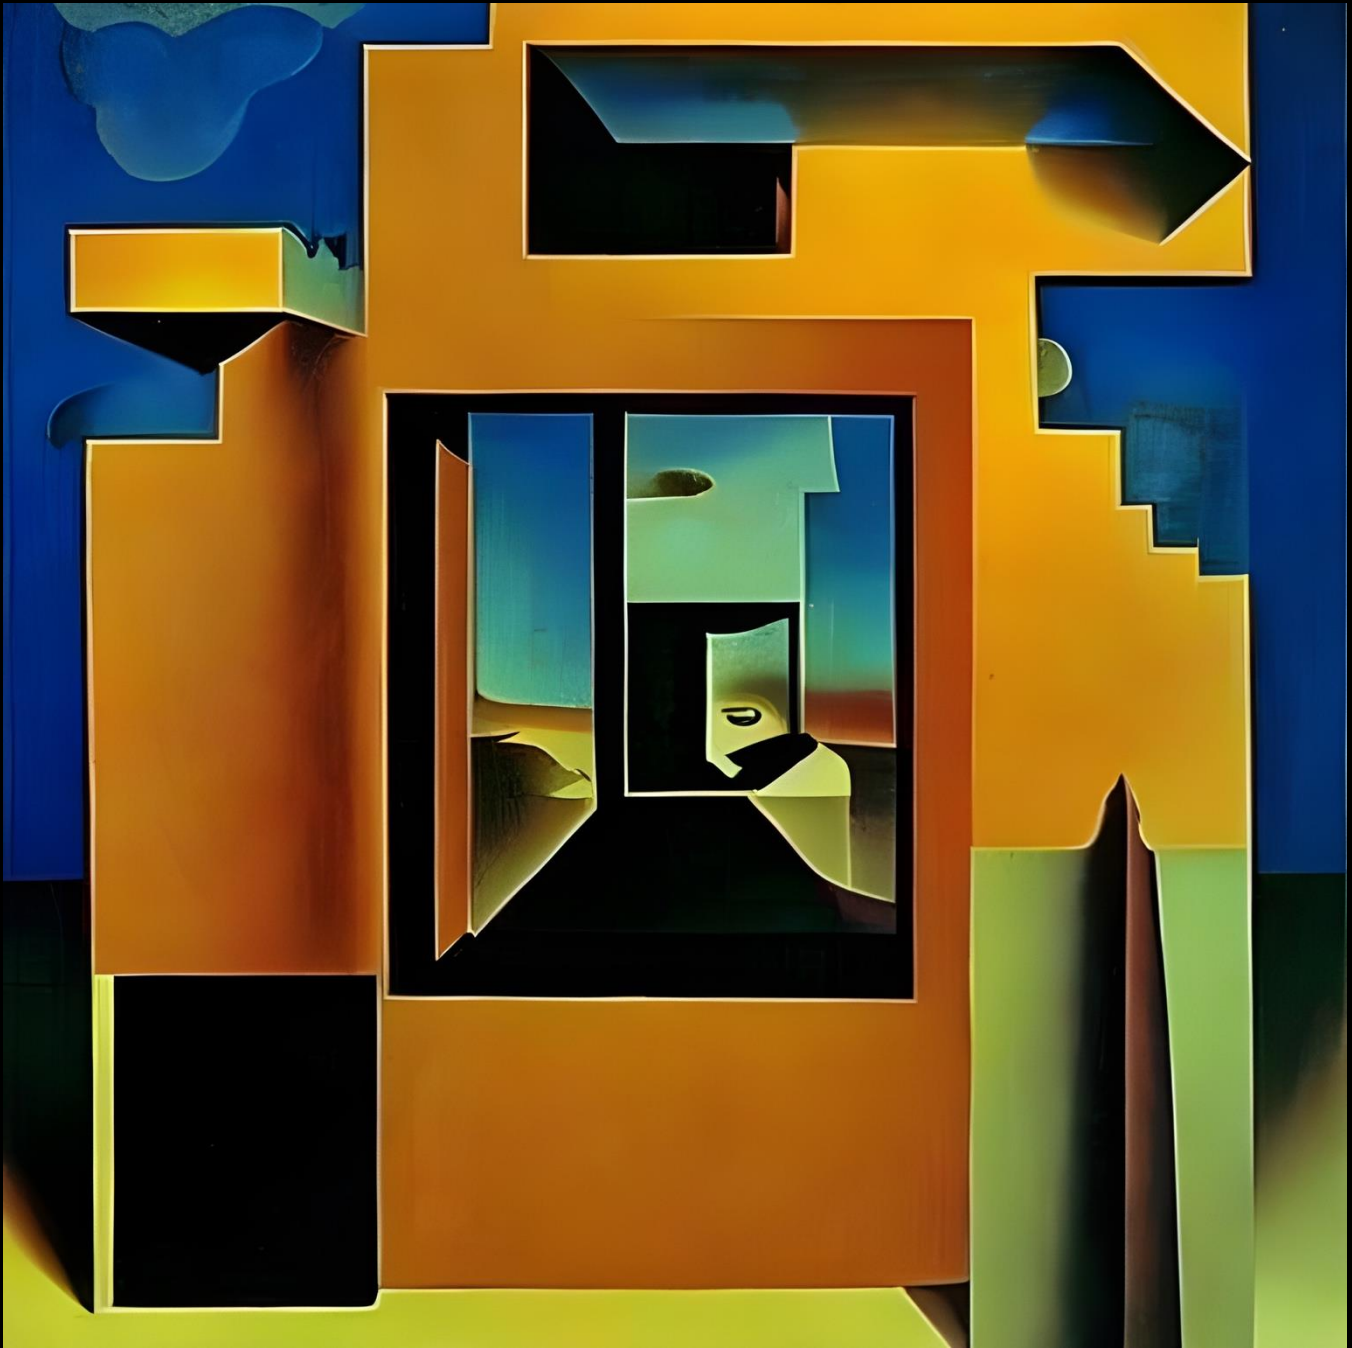

The question is not if Self is both singular and collective, neither singular nor collective, or both and neither singular and collective.

The question is not if both Inner and Outer obey the same law.

What is the relationship between will and desire, and where does it lie?

Knowledge, which is power, requires memory, which is fallible.

History, which is knowledge applied to memory, is a product of culture and environment.

The question is not the control of history.

The question is not control of wills.

What is the relationship between control and desire, and where does it lie?

The nature of Self is such that completion is approached through reflection of a perceived opposite or different.

The question is not how to restore balance.

The question is not the effect of opposing wills on history.

How can control be removed such that desire finds balance in history?

Irelynn Helmy