Dear Professor Nordenskiöld,

This is a personal correspondence.

I had been meaning to come and see you again. I am sorry this email comes first.

In late November I sent a synopsis to University Leadership on widespread research and academic misconduct (Main5.pdf) and which I suppose you received. Prior, I had sent a report mostly on bullying (Appendix.pdf) and, on the request of a putative inquiry, a report on research misconduct in publications by my then-reporting officer (Appendix2.pdf and Appendix3.pdf). Until my contract was terminated in early December, I supposed I would be reassigned at the University, and made this clear in correspondence.

I started by speaking with you informally for guidance. My message was clear: 'move me somewhere else where I will not be bullied into killing animals for no reason and do about the misconduct what you will'. Your message to me was also clear: 'report the misconduct officially or I will, and if I have a reason to terminate your contract I will.' You asked me what I thought would come from what I called this 'soft approach' and I replied that in my 'fantasy', I would be reassigned, the University's reputation is maintained, and demoralization of students and unethical animal experiments are halted.

Perhaps the music has to do with the dementia consortium which did not do research on dementia. Not that I would rather bother about any consortium, nor some other activities. What is puzzling is: since nothing I had to say was investigable, why is it important to silence me.

I learned not to entertain fantasies. I will litigate.

And I will do my duty towards correcting the scientific record, and alerting institutions and funding bodies, as well as authorities overseeing those (naturally, all abroad). Regardless of outcome.

I emphasize this is personal correspondence because the termination letter I was handed said if I talk to anyone at all about what is going on at University, I won't get their S$6000, and if I talk on non-personal matters to anyone at all at University now or anyone who was ever at University in the past, I will be prosecuted. Even the lawyers think this is strange, but this is how it is. Many strange things happening, perhaps you may guide me again.

Yours truly,
Mohamed Helmy
